

Take the stress out of Shakespeare

What can you do to make Shakespeare matter to your students? The study of Shakespeare can be a daunting task for teachers and students. The University of Northern Iowa, in partnership with Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington, D.C., will be presenting Shakespeare Set Free workshops for teachers this summer.

This text-based approach has been developed at Folger Shakespeare Library in consultation with teachers around the country, respected Shakespeare scholars, and Folger Shakespeare Library and its vast Shakespeare collection. This collaboration has resulted in the wonderful Folger editions of Shakespeare's plays and the Shakespeare Set Free teacher resource series. This active workshop will demonstrate a variety of tools to help you positively engage students in the study of Shakespeare.

Topics covered during the exciting day include:

- Engaging students with the language of Shakespeare
- How to get reluctant students out of their seats and performing
- Editing scenes to help students find meaning
- What plays to teach
- What students need to know about Shakespeare
- How to teach soliloquies
- New ways to use video in the classroom
